

Art & Language: Nobody Spoke

14 November – 17 January 2015

52-54 Bell Street, London

This exhibition of new work – comprising five new paintings, 17 chairs each made from 10 paintings, a performance featuring this installation of chairs and a number of recent drawings also referencing other pieces created by Art & Language – marks over 40 years since this contingent art group first showed at Lisson Gallery. What began as an amorphous, more-or-less anonymous gathering of like-minded artists and thinkers, with loosely connected chapters as far afield as Coventry, London and New York, is now defined as a collaboration between Michael Baldwin and Mel Ramsden, with participation from performers such as The Jackson Pollock Bar and Red Krayola. The continued presence and importance of Art & Language – as pioneering conceptual artists, combining text, performance, music and publishing – is testament to their enduring influence on, and indeed, anticipation of much current art practice, but is also the result of their constant questioning of art's limits and possibilities.

The titular gathering of chairs, Nobody Spoke, is a ghostly manifestation in the gallery (as well as the subject of a performance staged in the same space on the opening night by the The Jackson Pollock Bar). Every one of these non-functional seats has been constructed from 10 equal-sized canvases, with each individual panel exhaustively over-painted with motifs drawn from past Art & Language projects (including their famous Indexes of 1972-73), as well as many seemingly unrelated scenes (such as an upside down kangaroo, a portrait of George W. Bush, a black square, a loin of pork, some quantum mechanics and so on). Although the assembled chairs' conglomeration of imagery and empty states suggests an inability to communicate, they could be conversely seen to exist as coherent emblems or 'readers' of current contemporary art objecthood: namely as works that can be simultaneously and fluidly described as paintings, furniture, documentation, performance props and conceptual works of art.

A new group of large paintings, Sea Ghosts, continues these themes of hybridity, repositioning and self-reflexivity. Constructed from many layers of over-painted imagery, the act of continual obliteration produces complex compositions of borders and gestures, both painstakingly handmade and re-drawn in ink, creating parodies of painterly styles and short-circuiting easy visual readings. Demanding our attention further are a number of vitrines containing textual portraits, printed descriptions that are placed over actual portrait paintings of the faces alluded to in the obfuscatory sheets of text. Although invisible to the eye, the concealed portraits include such diverse figures as Michelle Obama, Hugo Chávez and Nouri al-Maliki.

Elsewhere, a selection of 40 drawings (from a total of 147) repeats or reveals many of the images contained within the chairs or paintings, albeit sometimes in degraded or mutated form, providing what Michael Baldwin calls: "footnotes, excursions, connections, disconnections, translations and betrayals." Not only do Art & Language challenge our commitment to looking at art by veiling their subjects or superimposing them atop one another, but they also disrupt the hierarchy between different modes of appreciation, refusing to favour either figuration or abstraction, nor the ocular ingestion of purely visual information over reading descriptive texts about the same art works.

About the artists

The activities of Art & Language have been marked from the outset by practical variety, by resistance to easy categorisation and by a tendency to provoke open and reflexive enquiry. Art & Language's earliest works date from before 1968, when the name was first adopted as the name of an artistic practice. In the following year, the first issue of the journal Art-Language was published in England. Then and over the next few years Art & Language provided a common identity for a number of people already involved in various types of collaboration. For a variety of activities which bore practically and critically upon the concept of art, but which were at home neither in the studio nor in the gallery, Art & Language promised a social base in shared conversation, which in turn transformed the practices of those involved.

Experimental and sceptical, perhaps their most famous work is Index 01, exhibited at documenta 5, Kassel, Germany (1972), a catalogue of their writings in eight filing cabinets presented on four plinths at eye level. Art & Language participated in documenta 7 and 10 (1997, 1982) and they were nominated for the Turner Prize, Tate Gallery, London in 1986. Solo exhibitions include Migros Museum fur Gegenwartskunst, Zurich (2012), Centro De Arte Contemporáneo (CAC) Málaga (2004); MoMA PSI, New York (1999); ICA, London (1991); Tate Gallery, London (1985); Musée d'Art Moderne, Toulon (1982) and Museum of Modern Art, Oxford (1974). Art & Language has a major exhibition, 'Art & Language Uncompleted' at Museu d'Art Contemporani de Barcelona (MACBA) until 12 April 2015.

About Lisson Gallery

Lisson Gallery is one of the most influential and longest-running international contemporary art galleries in the world. Established in 1967 by Nicholas Logsdail, it pioneered the early careers of important Minimal and Conceptual artists, such as Sol LeWitt and Richard Long, as well as those of significant British sculptors from Anish Kapoor and Tony Cragg to a younger generation, led by Ryan Gander and Haroon Mirza. In addition to its two exhibition spaces in London, one in Milan and a fourth gallery to open under the High Line in New York in 2015, the Lisson Presents programme also extends a legacy of curatorial innovation beyond the galleries, working with institutions and artists to present new initiatives around the world.
